Build-Date: 1000-06-12. Content-Type: application/zip. m4p MP3. The World's Coolest DJ Program.Diabetes is one of the most common metabolic diseases and has an increased incidence in the elderly. Loss of insulin-producing pancreatic beta-cells is a central feature of Type 1 diabetes, and a reduction in beta-cell mass is also a major determinant of the natural history of Type 2 diabetes and metabolic syndrome. We propose to develop and test a novel class of compounds that prevent cell death and/or delay disease progression by targeting the activity of caspase-3, the effector of the apoptotic program in pancreas. Caspases are an evolutionarily conserved family of proteases that play key roles in cell death and inflammation. Caspases are activated by dimerization and cleave their substrates via a peptide bond. They contain a catalytic domain with two major cleavage sites, namely a distal one, N-terminal of the catalytic domain, and a proximal one, proximal to the catalytic domain. Caspase-3 is the key initiator caspase and requires dimerization to be activated. While this has been recognized for years, the process of this dimerization is poorly understood. We have recently identified the caspase-initiating sequence of caspase-3 as a novel domain, CBD, which is required for dimerization, and in our preliminary results we have defined the structural features of the CBD. Now we will engineer CBD-deleted mutants and develop a set of CBD-based compounds that prevent dimerization, block the activation of caspase-3, prevent beta-cell death and delay the development of diabetes and/or metabolic syndrome in mice. We will also pursue studies to dissect the molecular mechanism by which diabetes impairs beta-cell function and mass. The mechanism by which this occurs is poorly understood, but we have shown that mice lacking glucagon are predisposed to diabetes, and we will now pursue studies to evaluate the effects of increased glucagon and insulin on beta-cell function and mass. Finally, we will assess the effect of caspase-3 activation and inhibition on the function of human islets. PUBLIC HEALTH RELEVANCE: Relevance to Public Health Diabetes mellitus is a major global health problem, affecting approximately 12% of the world population. In the USA alone, this disease affects more than 5%
